Product Description

1. Customers who train hard, work desk jobs, or recover from injuries already know percussive therapy works. They have seen it at the gym or physio and want their own.
2. The in store demo closes the sale every time. Once you turn it on and let the customer try it on their shoulder, the conversation shifts from whether to buy to which attachment to use first.
3. Gyms, sports stores, and physio clinics see customers asking for "massage guns" by name. Having them on the shelf secures the sale; not having them sends the buyer elsewhere.
4. Corporate buyers view this as a premium, standout gift. It hits the perfect brief for staff rewards and client gifts because it is highly practical and something people rarely buy for themselves.
5. Athletes and active professionals buy a unit for themselves and then return to buy more for training partners. One initial sale quickly starts a chain of active community referrals.
